Re: Senior iOS Developer

I recently attended an ACME event and was genuinely impressed by the combination of product ambition, thoughtful design, and customer focus. The continual reference to the customer, trying to understand their needs first, resonated deeply with my engineering philosophies.

My strengths as an engineer are my passion for elegant, clean code, my communication skills, and my ability to empathise. I'm a fast learner, and strive to automate repetitive tasks, simplify processes and document complexity. I've worked on large scale apps with millions of users and look for architectures that will scale, and age well over time. I understand the need to refresh legacy modules, and experience has taught me pragmatism.

I love the satisfaction of bringing a complex feature to life and finding the purest solution that will delight customers. I particularly enjoy collaboration with designers, product managers and other technical team members. In my experience, rigorous, respectful debate is a necessary part of the development process. However, I don't appreciate ego. I'm happiest in an empowered, multi skilled team that respects one another.

ACME is a company I would be proud to work for. I'm excited to have found a company that embraces change, values it's team, and very intentionally creates a product that customers love.

Thank you for your consideration. I look forward to meeting with the development team.
